Commented [TS21]: The structures return but with a twist – lessons learnt it seems. Tongue in cheek?

Commented [TS22]: Avoiding being historicised – this place could be anywhere – should not be immortalized – space liberated. Invitation to be in a living room near you, or perhaps your own.

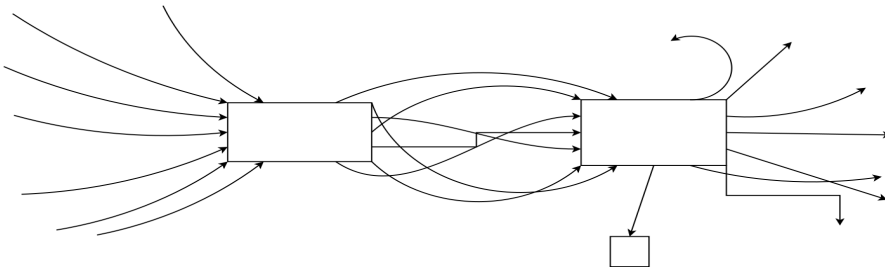

this is an open Invitation

this is a document designed for rejection

open school

‘post-Instal’ beginning MONDAY 15th NOVEMBER

(We feel we need some sort of structure with which to push against, and some way to judge when we should gather and when we should disperse.) open school is as easily rejected as this document: it is a space offered, but every gift is also a burden: how can we tolerate any limit to our freedom, but how can we live alone?

_OS 'post-INSTAL' Day Planner Provisional Schedule.

Notes towards frameworks/processes/definitions/?

-whatever happens will emerge from each moment/day/hour/conversation ... everyone is invited/welcome to propose, to partake, to facilitate, to listen, and everyone is collectively responsible for the happening (or not) of each moment, present and future. And everyone is invited/welcome to stay. (this could potentially be contributed to the instal errata)

-all day is open school. we are all linked by being (or having once been) present. We may decide to do some things together but it may just be what youd've been doing anyway...

MONDAY may look like this:

morning: a mass generation of ideas, themes, questions, joys, criticisms, points of discussion/investigation/confusion/clarity (stemming from our experiences at Instal, The Evacuation of the Great Learning, and anything else we'd like to explore) and tea

afternoon: figuring out where to go from here/there (using the above content as a starting point)

-sharing

-create some un/structured time throughout the week and dinner. How can we have a process of development, of learning, of production, of entertainment where we are not attempting to produce a result, and instrument, and implementation?

It is not us, it is it. Is it?
